Learn to improve student achievement by supporting teaching and learning.

Instructional leaders and coaches play a crucial role in impacting the culture of the school and improving practice. This session will provide training in becoming an effective communicator as coach, strategies for building relationships with teachers and principals, and tools for lesson study to help teachers improve instruction. Participants will have ample opportunity to explore with peers the challenges and opportunities they face in their day-to-day work.

Participants will:

- Define the role of coach.
- Build positive relationships with teachers and principals.
- Use protocols as a tool to study instruction.
- Improve student achievement by supporting teaching and learning.
- Actively listen as a coach.
- Provide effective feedback for teachers.

Shoshy Starr spent 13 years in the classroom in the Natick Public Schools. She teaches at Boston University, Salem State University, and Framingham State University. She has been training coaches and working with coach-administrator teams for the past eight years. Shoshy has a strong background in the change process and in supporting the growth of teacher development.
