This workshop will help you learn how to examine your biases, beliefs, assumptions and practices as a school to redesign teaching and learning. The goal of our work will be to discover how to make social justice the foundation of daily instruction. Participants will work to create a common language and understanding of social justice practices for your school. Most importantly, this workshop will allow you the time, space and collaboration necessary to plan for sustainable change. School teams are encouraged to attend this workshop.

Participants will:

- Evaluate bias, assumptions and values that impact teaching and learning.
- Examine effective and ineffective practices.
- Collaboratively create a social justice action plan.

Maureen Gilman is an adjunct professor with classroom experience teaching in Grades 1–5. She is a trained DESE mentor and works for Merrimack College and Endicott College as a cooperating practitioner for student teachers. Presently, she teaches a course for Endicott College titled "Integrating Technology in the Classroom," which focuses on introducing research-based theories, practices, and curricula related to technology. She understands the importance of incorporating 21st-Century skills that are needed for the future success of our students.
