If "the purpose of education is to produce not just good learners, but also good people," (Hardin, 2008) then it is suggested that all educators gain an understanding of their responsibility to guide the behavioral development and meaningful learning of every student and better understand the academic and non-academic factors that impact student behavior.

Participants will learn:

- Why students misbehave and discover interventions for those behaviors.
- How classroom management is like a puzzle.
- The importance of relationship building in classroom management.
- How procedures and routines impact classroom management.
- How social competencies impact classroom management.
- The difference between teacher-centered vs. person-centered classroom, and discover which style matches your educational philosophy.

Dr. Curtis Bates comes to Seaside Educational Consultants with vast experience in administration at both the principal and superintendent level. Armed with degrees from Fitchburg State University, University of Massachusetts-Lowell, and Boston College, he presently teaches school financial management to aspiring educational leaders at Salem State University. He has facilitated numerous workshops at the MSAA and the Rhode Island Principals' Association in multiple areas of leadership, curriculum, and instruction.
